THANK YOU FOR ALL YOU DO!

Early childhood is the most powerful time to explore our natural world. Children need to spend time out-doors to appreciate its wonder. Be careful not to re-strict experiences. Dirt is messy but not unhealthy. Children digging in dirt for worms may not be aes-thetic, but it isn't unsanitary. Lie on your backs and look at the patterns of the clouds or the sunlight through the trees. Viewing the outdoors as natural and open gives children permission to explore the world around them. And, helps them to appreciate the inspiration, awe, and majesty of our earth. During April, we as parents can role-model being open to our messy-natural world, appreciate a dirty child making mud pies and delight in helping them measure rainfall. Teaching children to love and care for their natural environment will have life long positive effects for kids and our earth around us!

-REMINDERS-
